The laboratory rat, like its wild counterpart, is an extremely intelligent animal, probably more so than the other rodents commonly used for biomedical research. This is reflected in its behaviour and, when treated properly and sympathetically, its tolerance to handling and restraint. Although feared by many novice animal scientists and technicians, outbred rats of either sex are usually ...

laboratory animal allergen is crucial to the nature and intensity of the symptoms (Bush, 2001). In mice, the major allergen is MUP (Mus m 1) the major urinary protein which is a prealbumin and may be found in urine as well as in hair follicles and dander. As the level of production of this protein within the liver is testosterone dependent, it is predominant in adult male mice. The second ...
